The justices selected a site owned by John Jones Jr. along Timber Branch, a small stream located between the present towns of Ahoskie and Woodland. Jones sold one acre of land to the justices for the building of a courthouse. The site is the present-day crossroads community of Saint John in Hertford County. By February 1724 – approximately sixteen months after enactment of the law which established Bertie Precinct – the justices had overseen the building of a courthouse. On February 10, 1724, five justices – William Maule, George Wynn, John Holbrook, Nathaniel Hill, and John Dew – convened court “at the Court house on Timber Branch.” Robert Forster served as clerk.
